Disruption Of Germany Predicted In Speech By Lord Curzon

London.—The whole field of Lord Curzon's foreign policy has been opened for the benefit of the Imperial Conference in a three-hour speech by the Foreign Secretary, Marquess Curzon, at the Imperial Conference, held in secret and only the sections of Lord Curzon's address dealing with the Ruhr difficulty and the Lausanne Treaty with the Turks were allowed to reach the public.

Both these questions were followed at great length, the foreign secretary going into details of the negotiations. With regard to the Lausanne Treaty, he indicated that when he went to the conference he had only hoped to secure the freedom of the Turkish straits for commercial vessels, whereas the treaty guaranteed freedom of passage for foreign warships, subject to a reasonable limitation in number, while the Black Sea was no longer a Russian preserve.

He admitted that he was not so satisfied with the position of foreign trade in Turkey under the treaty, but he thought the Turks themselves would be the greatest sufferers from foreign resources and facilities. He said the policy followed by the allies at Lausanne of conceding certain points to the Turks rather than bring the conference and resorting to war.

The talk concerning Turkey was a heavy one, he said, and the way lay to experience great disillusionment and disappointment, but "in making what will be a great experiment, he added, "he starts with a complete absence of resentment on our part and with a sincere expression of good will."

Reviewing the negotiations following upon the Franco-Belgian occupation of the Ruhr, he said he was gratified any suggestion of the slightest desire on the part of the British Government to let the Ruhr be run as a free zone, was met with a ready refusal. At the same time he confessed disappointment at "the result of the free zone, but he said he was determined in an effort to bring about a settlement."

He thought Germany's abandonment of passive resistance should have come three months ago, but he suspected that delay was due to the fact that no German Government could survive such a surrender, and whether Chancellor Brüning would survive was still uncertain.

The speaker said he would not judge France and the British Government "if it is a victory," but he doubted whether they were any nearer the point of exhaustion. He said he was sure that the interval during the German campaign which was all right, but which we have consistently been told to regard as a victory.

"And the disruption," he continued, "is not merely an ominous political symptom; it has a pretentious economic significance, for it means the ultimate disappearance of the debtor himself."

He thought that as far as he was able to gather, the German Government was sincere in its intentions and had taken the steps required of it, and that, therefore, in accordance with France's own admissions, Lord Curzon declared that the present policy of the British Government would be to wait the next move from France.

President Ebert Asks Retiring Chancellor To Organize New Ministry

Berlin.—Dr. Gustav Stresemann and his members of parliament resigned from office and President Ebert has called upon the retiring chancellor to organize a new cabinet.

The Stresemann Government retired from office with the resignation of passive resistance in the Ruhr and the Hindenburg as the only active accomplishment to its credit. While retirement of its members on this score, could seem to be not entirely fair, in view of the hopelessly tangled legacy assumed by it as the successor of the Cuno ministry, it is not entirely fair.
